Fay people we imagine can fail to experience a certain feeling of satisfaction at the verdict returned by the special jury in the case of STUART v. SPRADT, just concluded at the Supreme Court. A trial in forma nauperis is an unusual proceeding in this Colony, but the necessity for such facilities upon certain occasions has been very forcibly illustrated. The verdict of the jury does justice to a man in adverse circumstances, who, but for this the defendant, took him on board a steamer on protection, would have had to continue in the very state of poverty which for a time prevented his obtaining his rights. The case has been, on the whole, of a tedious description, but its merits are to be found within a very small compass. The chief question was whether Messrs. SPRATT & Co. were parties to a contract made with STUART to raise the barque Marie, or whether the engagement he kwong as one of the men, a Chinese Hospital into. But in addition to this, it kidnappers; he produced a written authority | Emily Beverley was then called, and gave the night. was admitted by Mr. Emanuel that an 1.45 p.m., he was on the Macao steamer wharf, detuched bungalow by themselves, and she rearrangement had been made for a future when, he heard a noise in the bows of the lated the circumstances attending her husband of the Court, and in spite of all efforts, owing Upon taking the box on deck, and opening it, partnership with respect to the Marie, that SPRATT & Co. and Captain Graham after the defendant surrounded by a crowd of Chinese, with her. Anyone doubting the correctness of this theory that no partnership existed between SPRATT & .Co. and Captain GRAHAM, this account was balanced off by debiting Captain GRAHAM with one-half the loss, and the firm with the remaining half. Mr. EMANUEL explained this by saying that SPRATE & Co. had been willing to take half the loss on its a night's lodging. He then came the next three days; she had known nothing of him is well founded. heavy less to Captain Graham; but this him. She was going to Macao to see after her James Beverley, Corporal in the 80th Regi. or less incident to all fires of magnitude, I have part of the case certainly did not appear very clear. The jury, at all events, returned a verdict that there was a contract between SPRATT & Co. and STUART, and, of course, at this point the matter became comparatively simple. There were certain special points at which exception was taken to the contract, but the facts generally were sufficient to show that the plaintiff had been engaged by the defendants to raise the vessel, and that the nature of the arrangement was that of an open contract.

The matter has been referred to the Registrar of the Court with reference to the details, which are, of course, of no special was that the defendants had apparently held themselves out as partners in the transaction, her to bring up the man Yan-a-kwi, but she in such a way as would lead a reasonable declined to attempt to procure him. much increased by the fact that the books, if taken without the explanation given by Mr. EMANUEL, showed that a partnership existed between Messrs. Spratt & Co. and Captain GRAHAM. It was not unlikely that a man of no great education, like the plaintiff, without his knowledge. The defendant formerly her locket was attached. should have omitted in the first instance to ascertain in any very precise manner that Mesers, SPHATT & Co. were actually partners | next, with Captain Guanam in regard to the raising of the vessel, and not, as they allege, merely acting with him in view of a future partnership after the vessel had been raised While the matter was going on there did not appear to be any reason for special care on this point, which later assumed a very different aspect. It seems, however, tolerably certain that in popular parlance Messrs. Spratt & Co. were "in," the operations for raising the vessel; and even if there was no partnership between them and Capt. GRAHAM, and they acted in such a way as to lead the plaintiff to believe they were responsible, they would be liable to him, as having been induced by their representations to give the credit. Looked at, indeed, in any light, there appears no room to doubt that the verdict lum, tried in this Colony on the 27th April last, which the jury has arrived at was warranted or the facts.

A telegram has been received, stating that the market for the new Teasat Hankow opened on the 16th instant, on a basis of Tls. 34 for Monings. The quality was reported as being a little botter than last Season's.

(Japan Gazette, May 9th.) . The educational movement continues to extend throughout the country with a rapidity unprecedented in other nations. One Ken (District), with a population of 635,700, has now in working 791 schools, out of 936 contemplated to be established. If all the other districts have made proportionate provision for instruction, the number of schools now in operation will be over 44,000.

The religious riots in the distant provinces, and a rising caused by fear of the new conscription, have been putdown, and the only inclan, who still adhere to their old fashions and retain their hatred of foreigners. Negotiations are still being carried on for a treaty with Peru, and the settlement of the Maria Luz case. Japan, however, still refuses to concede extraterritoriality rights, and matters are still where they were weeks ago. The benefite of the Naval School at Tokei are now thrown open to all comers capable of passing a competitive examination at the Kagunsho. We trust this wise step will not be retraced, and that the Government will extend action of this kind throughout its other De-alone exalting merit. In Wakamatz Ken (Aidzn) there are two ordinary class schools and ninety seven small schools, newly established, the admission to which is so low-priced that all can attend. The echolars are divided into three classes-1st, 2nd and 3rd. The first pays $1 a year, the second 70 cents, and the third 40 cents per annum The small schools are siready opened, and the large ones are about to open. A German toucher named Form has been engaged. The Ken informs the Okurasho that certain residents are willing to supply the money for the support of those schools, but requests that they may be permitted to reward the donors.

We mentioned a few day since a dislike of the Japanese to the new laws, on the score that rich and poor, samurai and peasant, were not treated alike. We find that a law code has been published and is sold at a losing rate (some 34 boos) that every householder may buy one. The secret of the thing appears to be that, as in other unenlightened countries - that is to say, where the rich make and administer laws-transgressors with money are let off comparatively unpunished with fines, whilst the poor are deprived of liberty and their wives and children left to starve or thieve. A pertinent letter on this subject has been forwarded to the Government by Sungibara be ha chi of S'chinnoye in Oshiu, suying that Government Notification No. 16 of 1872, and Government Notification 33 of the present year, abolish the Samurai clans and proclaim equal political rights. How, then, he asks, comest it that the new law specifically provides for distinction in the rank of offenders, and varies their punishment for oriminal of-

It forms a feature as prominent as the garden, not only about country mansions and houses, anug parsonages and rural villas, but even in town dwellings, wherever a green patch can possibly be seeured and cultivated. It would, indeed, be a curious calculation, and of some interest to those who hold that every square inch of our island should be put to a productive use, to reckon up the number of acres at present enclosed and employed in England for no other purpose than that of enabling a number to travelling trader. of ladies and gentlemen to knock about a wooden ball with a stick for an hour or so at a to travelling trader.

Croquet without heat or excitement. Thousands of groups as picturesque as the Arcadian dreams of Watteau will be realised throughout England under the auspices of Croquet during the season. Croquet admits of dress of the most engaging and enterprising patterns. Its uniforms are essentially and distractingly coquettish. This may be one reason why the game is very popular amongst ladies. There are, of course, various kinds of Croquet parties and gatherings, from the "surprise" to the regular fête, for which long invitations have been issued. Those who think, or rather who speak in ignorance about Englishwomen not knowing how to dress-M. Taine, for instance, who like others of his compatriots, appears to mistake Mrs. Macawi the cheesemonger's wife, in the Park, for an English lady of position-should attend a large Croquet party, and see with what exquisite taste and artistic propriety many of our belles can turn out. In these assemblages we have the openair enjoyment of a pic nic without any of the discomforts, and what might be termed anatomical drawbacks of that perplexing form of entertainment. The Bostess of a Oroquet gathering can sort and distribute her guests at discretion. She can place the bunglers and the triflers as they ought to be placed, and arrange to their heart's content. A house where a large Current Rates. Croquet party is convened should possess three or four play-grounds at least. For attitude and deportment, archery bears the palm from Croquet: but, after all, the positions before the target are not practical enough. Ladies in private life never stand as if they were pulling a bow, but the handling of a Oroquet mallet, the nice conduct of it, admits of as many airs and graces as Addison associated with the employment of the fan. Croquet as a sport is free from those objectionable features associated with too many of our national pastimes. The Ring has not yet made the game a subject of betting. Gambling, except in kid gloves, is unknown upon the lawn. Nobody there can be legged or got atno mate champion has yet fallen to pieces over the hoops, no one faints off, oracks up, goes all abroad, drops it, or is liable to any other of those terrible and mysterious incidents which so often befall the race-horse or the atblete. The terminology of the pursuit is as yet free from slang. When we read that "a rover may similarly be pegged away by an advers rover," we may find a little initial difficulty in interpreting the rule, but it would be as impossible to legislate for Croquet without employing technical language as it would be to write a treatise on botany in plain English. The Croquet pundits and professors, however, might imitate the construction of an Act of Parlia. surances, viz:ment to the extent of giving us explanatory definitions of the specific sense in which certain words are to be taken, though they might display more accuracy in this respect than and not exceed. 3 the framer, for instance, of the Wild Birds ing Act, who contrives to make it seem as if a Above 3 months } "sheriff" were a kind of fowl not to bagged and not exceed. 6 ... ! do. no great improvements or reforms have been Above 6 months the full annual rate. attempted or urged in the game, but we read now that "for all matches of importance the All England Croquet Club has again decided on using three and three-quarter hoops, and on NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE limiting the width to four inches for all other games." A BLESSING. Adittle child hath blessed me: I wonder what it means! It mems a brighter blessing Than a bishop's or a queen's In her snowy nightgown dressed, Standing up to be caressed, Softly lisping in my ear

Pretty words-" God bless you, dear." They fill my heart with wonder; Of God what can she know? She cannot tell the meaning. Of the words that please me so. Like the church's silver bell. Widning souls to heaven from bell, Knowing not what glory lives In the message that it gives. It is so sweet to hear her-Her rosy mouth to see

A NATURAL LINGUIST. A MAN WHO KNEW ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN LANGUAGES-A PASSION FOR

Guiseppe Mezzelanti was, without doubt, the greatest muster of languages who ever lived. He was born in Bologna in the year 1774, and his father, a carpenter, destined him for the same calling. He worked at a bench standing within hearing of the recitations of some schoolboys in Greek and Latin, and without knowing the Greek alphabet, or even looking into a Greek or Latin book, he picked up by ear a considerable knowledge of both languages, thus discovering to himsel and others his wonderful aptitude for linguistic studies, and attracted the notice of a priest, who arranged for his education. In college he mastered Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Spanish, French, Swedish, German, Arabic, and Coptic, and at the age of twenty-three was appointed Professor of Arabic in the University at Bologna. During the Napoleonic wars he was a constant visitor to the hospitals, whither he went mainly for the purpose of learning the various languages spoken by the prisoners there, among whom he found Russians, Bohemians, Wallachs, Servians, Hungarians, Croats and Poles, and from them he learned to speak fluently all of their languages. Later in life he went to Rome, first as keeper of the library of the Vatician, and afterward as cardinal. Here he continued his linguistic studies, mastering Saucrit, Persian, Georgian, Welsh Irish, Lappish, American, Chinese, and a number of other tongues, and when he died, in 1849, he could speak correctly and fluently one hundred and fourteen different languages. The most astonishing part of the matter, however, was that he not only spoke these languages correctly, but knew perfectly their peculiar idioms, and was even familiar with the little local dialectic variations in each." Lord Byron, astonished at his perfect mastery of good English, tested him with English slang, and found the Italian priest more than a match for himself in that, whereupon he pronounced him "a monster of languages, a Briareus of parts of speech, and a walking polyglot." Another of his admirers thought that if he had been at Babel he might have acted as interpreter for the confused host without any kind of

IRELAND. Merrows, mermen, merwomen, mermaids are to be included amongst the graceful folklore Fauna of Ireland. The most learned commentators on Celtic antiquities assure us that the first merman was named Fintan, who came to Ireland before the Deluge, and was saved from drowning by being transformed into a fish. He afterwards lived in his natural form, though represented in sculptures in the same shape as the Assvrian Dragon (in a kind of salmon-skin cloak), until the days of St. Patrick, by whom he was converted to Christianity, and he ultimately became a saint and died of a good old age. In the Cathedral of Clonfert, country Galway, is the figure of a mermaid of the ordinary pattern, except that she carries an open book in her hand instead of the regulation looking-glass. Mr. Marcus Keane in his "Towers and Temples of Ancient Ireland," endeavours to trace a distinct connecbetween this county Galway mermaid and Vishnu, as represented in the Matsya Avatar. A drawing of Vishnu certainly carries out Mr. Keane's curious suggestion, the Indian deity issuing from the mouth of a fish, the fish covering the lower portion of the body, while the figure bears a book her hand. The Irish mermaid, in fact, Mr. Keane concludes, is identical with the fishgod of India, Babylon, and Canaan. In the --- "Annals of the Four Masters" we are told -"In this year (558) was taken the mermaid, i.e., Liban, the daughter of Eochaidh." But the annals of Ulster set down this remarkable capture as having occurred in 571. "According to a wild legend, this Liban was the daughter of Eccaidh, from whom Loch Eathach or Lough Neagh was named, and who was drowned in its eruption (A.D. 90) together with all his children except his asked if we were "army followers." BURYING THE DEAD AT SEA. "All hands bury the dead!" A solemn summons! The ship's bell tolls solemnly. The courses are all hauled up; the maintopsail is braced aback, the frigate's way is deadened as much as may be, and then the silence is broken only by the hollow beat of waves, and the subdued, murmurous sound arm, to his captain, "you see that when I of men mustering by hundreds, slowly and ventured ontside the lines, and got this gravely though it be.
